We have seen a new distribution of the population. More and more people have begun to move to and settle in the great city areas—the metropolitan areas. This movement is anything but a deliberate act of anybody. It is an act for seeking convenience and security. It is really a startling landscape, not of the rolling mountains or spectacular waterfalls, but of blocks of tall skyscrapers connected one by one by smooth-going traffic, so quiet and in good order. A good living is available within a community, a society not as large as a town or a city. Good life also is possible within an immense building, where people have easy access to supplies for daily life, including good education and recreation. Pollution problem is far away. Patrol forces are near at hand. Safety facilities are employed widely. Violations of the law are mostly minor in nature. It is a small world indeed, completed with almost everything plus man power. It is a world like a life spent on a voyage aboard a luxurious ocean liner, which only has to stop by a few sea ports. It promises a life full of a different kind or romance in contrast with the romance in the countryside yet the attractions from there are more imaginative than realistic. Therefore, this sort of community life becomes a new fever, especially among those idealists.
